

OFFICERS SEIZE STILL AND MASH

Two Hundred Gallons Found At Plant in West Ogden

Marine one of the largest liquor stills by the police department for the purpose of detecting bootleggers. Detectives Everett Noble and Ed Butterfield this morning uncovered a large still, two hundred gallons of raisin mash, and accessories which go to make up a first class "moonshine" plant.

The raid was made in West Ogden. The still was in an advanced stage of construction, was found, the mash has not yet been fermented.

Detective Noble stated that the man who owns the still apparently was making preparations to run off a large quantity of liquor.

A small quantity of the finished product was found and the officers said that the operator of the still was apparently making liquor of the first grade.

The fact that the hydrometer was used with the still and the mash indicates that the men making the whiskey were experienced distillers, the detectives asserted.

The officers assert with information in their hands they expect to cause the immediate arrest of the still operator.

The officers experienced difficulty in searching the man, but said in their investigation of his pockets, they found a complete hypodermic outfit, minus the "dope."

Morgan was arrested at Twenty-third street and Washington avenue after being reported by a man who said he was attempting to enter the service station on that corner.
